The audience will consist of about 80 individuals from the Departments of State, Commerce, and Defense, the National Security Council, Intelligence Agencies, and academic institutions. Some 40 of these people will be area experts assigned to four geographic panels (Latin America, Sub-Saharan Africa, Middle East-South Asia, and East Asia) each chaired by a National Intelligence Officer. The panels will meet in separate rooms periodically during the seminar to identify Third World areas of paramount importance as intelligence targets. The panels will also identify countries of moderate interest, having the potential to move into the first subset, and will cite problems, issues, and trends that are expected to affect US security in high interest areas over the next five to ten years. []

A second seminar session is scheduled for 18 and 19 November. The first day will convene at State and the second day at the Community Headquarters Building on F Street. Briefings and discussions on 21/22 October and 18 November will be conducted at the SECRET level. On the 19th, the sessions will be SI/TK, and will examine collection and reporting requirements, management of the intelligence production effort, and anticipated shortfalls in production—all based on findings of the first seminar series on 21 and 22 October. Because of the change in orientation between the two sessions, many of the attendees on 21/22 October will not be invited to attend the November sessions in toto, although the briefings on the 18th will be open to essentially the same audience. []

Results of the seminar will be compiled by the Intelligence Producers Council Staff, coordinated, and forwarded for your consideration.
